Iran Releases Top Shah Foe To Ease Crisis

By Joe Alex Morris Jr.

TEHRAN, Dec. 6 — The government today released Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi's leading political opponent from jail in a move apparently designed to ease tensions here before Iran's most important religious ceremonies Sunday and Monday. National Front leader Karim Sanjabi and a close associate, Darious Forothar, were arrested Nov. 11 shortly before Mr. Sanjabi was to give a press conference. He had just returned from Paris where he had met with the exiled religious leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, the symbol of rebellion against the shah. They had agreed in Paris that the only solution to the protracted crisis here was the removal of the shah from power.

No explanation was given for Mr. Sanjabi's release, but it appeared to be one of several steps by the military-led government to prevent bloody classes between the army and demonstrators during the coming moturning period when Shi-ite Moslems observe the martyr-dom of Imam Husein, founder of the sect and grandson of the prophet Mohammed.

"As a politician, I feel a great satisfaction at having arrived at this day in which Spaniards are going to vote on a constitution of freedoms," Premier Adolfo Suarez, Israeli-occupied territories as a move to appease hard-line backers of Prime Minister Menachem Begin 46, said as be cast his ballot at a who were balking at the proposed establishment of civil autonomy for Palestinians on the West Bank and in the Gaza Strip.

At the same time, these diplo-mats remarked, the Israeli government may, as it bas in the past, be using the settlement drive as a means to exert pressure on Egypt, and possibly also the United States, in the present crucial stage of treaty bargaining.

Israel's settlement policy was a major topic during the talks at Camp David in September. President Anwar Sadat of Egypt is known to have insisted that the setting up of new Jewish communities in Israeli-occupied areas was a serious stumbling block in the search for peace, and President Carter endorsed this view. The Israeli prime minister eventually suspended settlement activity.

Discord on Commitment

Egyptian and U.S. officials appeared to hope at the time that the Israeli commitment not to start any new settlements would cover the five-year transition period fore-seen in the framework for peace that was laboriously produced at Camp David. However, Mr. Begin made clear that he envisaged a moratorium on new settlements only for the three months during which Israel and Egypt were to work out the treaty terms.

The three-month period following the signing of the Camp David accords on Sept. 17 runs out in 11 days, and it is far from certain that Egypt and Israel will reach full agreement on the peace treaty.

"Now is the most difficult time in the negotiations since Camp David," a Foreign Ministry spokesman here said today when he was asked whether he would characterize the mood in government quarters as optimistic or pessimistic tacts.

During the last few weeks Mr.

Begin has been confronted with increasing restiveness among groups that had supported him, but oow appear afraid of the implications of the self-rule for Palestinians that the treaty would set up. The prime minister and his aides have tried to allay such worries, promising that settlers and other Israeli residents would under no conditions be evicted from the West Bank, and founded.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6 (NYT) The Supreme Court, in a 5-to-4 decison, ruled yesterday that an automobile passenger does oot have the right to challenge the constitu-tionality of a police search of the car in which be is riding, even if the search turns up evidence later used to convict him of a crime.

The decision, which affirmed the armed-robbery coovictions of two filinois men, narrows the scope of the ecostitutional prohibition against introducing illegally seized evidence at trial. The four dissenters accused the majority of ruling that "the Fourth Amendment protects property, ool people" and of inviting "police to engage in pa-tently unreasonable searches every time an automobile contains more than ooe occupant."

The owner of an automobile retains an unquestioned right to challeage a police search of his car. That right is afforded by a 1960 Su-preme Court decision, Jones v. U.S., to "anyone legitimately on

Rather, Justice Retroquist said, the key test should he whether someone has a "legitimate expecta-tion of privacy" in the place being searched. He did not say precisely bow such an expectation of privacy could be shown in a given case, but

Federal Workers Are Vexed

Complex U.S. Pay System Is Haywire

By Kathy Sawyer

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6 (WP) -A blue-collar worker in a Seattle-area Navy shipyard cannot afford e "promotion" to a white-collar job as production controller, because the move would mean an bourly pay cut from $12.20 to $10.19.

In Detroit, a man who recently joined the federal work force as an imskilled maintenance worker who mows lawns and moves furniture makes $15,200 a year, while a beginning engineer with four years of college working at the same build-ing receives $13,600. In a Veterans Administration hospital in Los Angeles, a newly hired janitor earns $5.42 an hour while a licensed practical nurse with 10 years of outside experience receives $5.05 an hour.

In the District of Columbia, e new government typist makes $28 a week less than her counterpart et a private firm nearby, but in New Orleans, a federal typist makes $8 more than the private sector typist.

Changes Are Sought

The U.S. government's monumentally complicated system for deciding how much to pay employ-ces has gone haywire in a number of ways, and government officials at various agencies offer examples such as these to illustrate this,

The Carter administration is trying to agree on a set of changes that the president may send to Congress early next year. Officials said that the changes could save billions of dollars and would reduce raises or pay levels for U.S. workers in a number of job categories. But they maintain the result will be a fairer distribution of the money and e more defensible sys-

The Civil Service Commission chairman, Alan Campbell pointed out that "if we don't get some lar workers earn an average of 8 changes made, there will be a fronpercent more than their counterwe will be forced back" to a differ- . estimated. ent system that is even less in the interests of employees, be says.

Mr. Campbell and other administration officials said that they realize any such proposals are likely to receive a hostile reception from members of Coogress sympathetic to federal employees and their

The unions have expressed opposition to the changes since their recommendation several years ago.

"For a Democratic president to propose to cut the pay of working people is a sadness," said a source on the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, which would handle the pay proposals. "The re-ception here would be cool and dif-ficult, but I wouldn't say Congress wouldn't eventually adopt the

The present system is based on the simple principle that govern-ment workers should be paid sala-ries comparable to those earned in the private sector.

In harsb bureaucratic reality, however, that principle translates into a Rube Goldberg contraption of graphs, parabolas and logar-ithms, of lashing "indexation and weighting methodologies," of "in-questionable result that then is further punched, stretched or squeezed by politics and economics into a final pay structure.

"Some people think you look at a secretary in the private sector and she makes $4 an hour, so you give a federal secretary doing the same work $4," said Ruth O'Donnell, a Civil Service Commission pay expert shaking her head. "Uh-uh."

Few Understand

"One of the troubles with the federal pay system is basically that it's so damn complicated that very few people in the world actually understand it," said a Netional Treasury Employees Union official. Union leaders contend that the process makes U.S. workers seem overpaid and that e built-in time lag keeps their pay rates several; months behind those of the private,

The bugs in the pay system not, only misspend money but also start a cause morale problems at government work sites and make it dififcult to recruit or hold employees in certain occupations, according to by some managers.

Under the current system, for. instance, blue-collar and white-collar workers are paid under two: completely separate and dissimilar systems. Blue-collar pay, based on local wage rates, has risen more rapidly than white-collar pay, which is uniform nationwide.

Because blue-collar wages arebased on local rates and because various special provisions give them an extra boost, U.S. blue-colpercent more than their counterparts in the private sector, officials

Confused Status

Moreover, a blue-collar worker ... who had worked his way to whitecollar status eight years ago, when it really was a promotion, cannot fall back into his old job in order to protect himself against a layoff, the official added. "Now, going back to this old job would be a promotion," If Silling the official said.

About 400,000 government em-ployees are overpaid and 300,000, are underpaid, e Civil Service Commission expert estimated, including in the formula retirement, vacation and other fringe benefits that the government provides. The process currently ignores these items.

Some experts said that, because. government benefits are so generous compared with those of the private sector, this new way of calcual raises for virtually all whitecollar workers.

There is disagreement within the administration in this area, officials asid, about such questions as how to measure benefits. For example, should job security and easier promotions be included? And some said that because no valid comparison of private and federal benefits. In has been made, the effect the new tergrade deviations" and "uncor-rected residuals" and curve-fitting. ### William G. Still

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (NYT) -William Grant Still, 83, dean of black classical composers, died Sunday in a nursing home in Los Angeles.

Mr. Still was a pioneer in his field. His "Afro-American Symphony" (1931) is regarded as the first work of its kind by a black composer. He was the first black musician to conduct a major American orchestra, the Los Angeles Philharmonic in the Hollywood Bowl, in 1936. He wrote an opera, "Troubled Island," to a libretto by Langston Hughes, which was pro-duced by the New York City Opera in 1949

Before that, bowever, be had had long experience in popular and commercial music as an orchestrator and arranger. During the 1920s and '30s he worked for such jazz and popular musicians as W.C. Handy and Paul Whiteman.

His main aim was always to develop a symphonic type of black music, which he did in his "Afro-American Symphony," a work played throughout the United States. This ideal persisted in all his music, which was melodious and conservatively styled, and was based on black spirituals, although these were seldom quoted directly.

In the course of his career he won two Guggenheim Fellowships. In 1944, be garnered a $1,000 war bond in a nationwide contest with his "Festive Overture." In 1961, his "The Peaceful Land" won $1,500 in a National Federation of Music Clubs' contest for a work dedicated to the United Nations.

Navy Contracts Are on Schedule

Maine Shipyard Hits Tide of Overruns

By George C. Wilson

BATH, Maine, Dec. 6 (WP) viver, a strange thing is happening this era of Navy ships being dewered years late and at a cost way h ver the original price tag.

The Bath Iron Works, which tarted building ships for the Navy t 1890, is building a new breed of estroyer on time and under the greed-upon price.

And, according to the shipyard's tanagement, Bath has no intention f filing claims against the governtent for extra money — a promise in a contrasts with the $2.7 billion tat other shipbuilders have de-ianded the Navy pay them for un-repected costs on their contracts.

Bright Spot

Why Bath Iron Works is such a ight spot in shipbuilding — de-ys by other shipbuilders are total-ig 100 years — is a story of Maine orkers who like to build ships, of elated Navy reforms and of a mpany management determined undertake oo more than it can

The result is a new class of ship it looks like a small destroyer ut is called a guided missile frigate ith the Navy designation FFG — esigned to keep the sea lanes open there should be war.

"The best ship in 20 years," Rear dm. J.D. Bulkeley said after the 1st of this new class, the Oliver plant is after Bath Iron Works delivered to the Navy last December.

Strategic Victory

From a naval strategy standsint, the Perry class marks a victofor those who argue that it is me to build smaller, cheaper ships cause oo single ship - including iclear-powered giants -- can covtwo places at once.

The Spruance contract pitted the laine delegation in Congress gainst John Stennis, D-Miss., nairman of the Senate Armed Serices Committee, who helped locate te Litton yard in his home state. itton had no experienced shipuilding force to compare with

Although comparative figures are difficult to obtain from the Navy, the Pentagon's fiscal 1979 report on the cost of major weapons shows that each of the 3,600-ton patrol frigates — including research — was expected to cost $152 million compared to $383.5 million for the 7,300-ton DD-963 Spruance destroyer and $938.6 million for the 9,000-ton DDG-47 Aegis anti-aircraft destroyer. (All figures are fiscal 1978 estimates).

At the shipyard, Navy officers and company executives talk differ-ently. They focus on how much it will cost the yard to build the bodies of new class of patrol frigates. The Navy has a target price of $48 million for this construction — excluding the cost of the engines and the weapons that the government will furnish — and a ceiling price of $52.6 million. Under the latest estimates, Bath. after allowing for inflation, will de-liver the 11 ships it has contracts to build for the $48 million target price or less — the first time that a shipbuilder has done so well on surface combat ships in almost two

Also, Bath executives insist that they will deliver the ships on the average of seven weeks ahead of

Sergeant Guilty In Recruit Death

FORT JACKSON, S.C., Dec. 6 (AP) — An Army court-martial jury has found a drill sergeant guilty of dereliction of duty and negligent homicide in the death Oct. 29 of a recruit.

Sgt. 1st Class Lawrence Chap-man Jr. was reduced to the rank of staff sergeant and was ordered to forfeit $500 in pay for one month.

He was convicted this week of three charges relating to the heat-stroke death of Pv. Wayne Krassow of Cygnet, Ohio, and was acquitted of similar charges in the death of another recruit. The prosecution contended that the 18-yearold recruits, in their first day of training, collapsed after they were forced to carry logs and sandbags in nighttime heat that exceeded 100

Bath's and ran into trouble when it schedule, saving the Navy between $20 million and $30 million. The Perry is 445 feet long, carries two anti-submarine helicopters, is armed with missiles and a 76-mm gun, can travel at more than 30 knots with two gas-turbine engines turning the single propeller, and is highly automated so that a comparatively small crew of 11 officers and 153 enlisted men can operate

Bath is building the ships in sections so that everything — from steel decking to light bulbs — can be installed in an assembly building rather than in the cramped quarters of the ship after it is launch

High-Quality Workers

Although other shippards, including Litton, build ships in sections, Bath's ability to attract and hold high-quality workers is hard to match in the United States. The Maine yard has about 10 applicants for every opening, and only 12 per-cent of its 5,000-person work force leaves every year, with only about half that percentage quitting.

Capt. Charles Mull, the Navy officer overseeing the patrol-frigate program from an office at the Bath yard, said that "we don't have an attitude problem among the workers bere. They want to do it right." Capt. Mull added that the Navy has instituted a number of reforms to reduce the chances of cost overruns and delays. One reform was building and testing the lead ship before freezing the design of the others in the class. This meant a delay of almost two years between the commissioning of the first ship and the start of the second one. But Navy leaders contend that this "fly before you buy" approach is paying

John Sullivan, president of Bath Iron Works, said that the yard's ability to complete 76 percent of the first production ship on land before launch saved money and

Algeria's Future, After Boumedienne, Seems Uncertain

By James M. Markham

ALGIERS, Dec. 6 (NYT) - Algeria has been the voice of Third World assertiveness, a militant in the Arab-Israeli dispute and a pragmatist in balancing its military rela-tions with the Soviet Union by strong economic ties with the United States. But what will be the political contours after Houari Boumedienne?

"Some are saying that the Sadat phenomenon might repeat itself in Algeria," said an editorial in Sunday's Al Shaab, a state-run daily in Algiers. It alluded to the dismantling of President Gamal Abdel Nasser's "socialist" legacy in Egypt by President Anwar Sadat. The newspaper insisted, however, that the Algerian revolution is not a revolution of roses, like in other countries, but a revolution of struggle and change."

But there are other voices.
Among those who speak French, still the main language of political discourse in Algeria, there is some talk of a political demobilization of the people. And some argue that, maybe, it is time for a pause in the austere, breathtaking march toward industrialization and socialism that Col. Boumedienne bas imposed, particularly in the last few years. Fueled by high prices for natural gas and petroleum, Algeria's gross national product grew by 4 percent in 1974, 8.8 percent last year and is expected to grow an impressive 9 percent through 1982.

But important industrial advances have been accompanied by restrictions oo and shortages of con-sumer goods and even basic foodand by a worrisome stagnation in the beavily socialized agricultural sector. During this time a black-market economy has sprung up in which cement is di-

Last year, Algeria had to import 1.5 million tons of grain, much of it from the United States, its largest trading partner. Food imports have been $700 million a year for three years. Meanwhile, inflation has riseo from 15 percent in 1975 to roughly 25 percent this year. Whatever leadership emerges after Col. Boumedienne's death will certainly want to contain any slide toward an Iranian-style social and political explosion. The question being asked is how, By tightening the economic and political screws io an already tightly run state or by loosening them? By checking a growing disparity in incomes be-tween rich and poor or by allowing it to widen, as has happened in Egypt?

Algeria has one of the world's youngest populations — 60 percent of its 18 million citizens are under 18; 47.7 percent are under 14. Its universities are jammed. An annual population growth of 3.2 percent, again among the world's highest, is a demographic time bomb, and it may be a political one, as peasants abandon unsatisfying collective farms for the cities.

Frank Debate

Io the spring of 1975, Algeria held an astonishingly frank and at times heated debate at the local level on the drafting of what be-came the country's National Char-ter, an elaborate blueprint for the march to socialism that is an annex to the constitution. When the discussions seemed to be getting out of hand and sensitive issues like corruptioo were raised, the authorities stopped them. But it demonstrated that Algerians are oot politically passive. The cleavages within the Afgeriverted from government projects to an military and technocratic elite

Air Force Officers Disciplined After SAC Base Security Breach

OFFUTT AIR FORCE BASE, Neb., Dec. 6 (AP) - Officers responsible for protecting Offutt Air Force Base, headquarters of the Strategie Air Command, bave been relieved of duty after a security breach, the Omaha World-Herald reported yesterday.

The newspaper said in a copyright story that SAC investigators, working undercover, were able to penetrate the area that serves as an operating base for the SAC airborne command post and houses reconnaissance planes and aircraft designed to be used by the president in a crisis.

The base commander, Col. Richard Newton, told the paper that although the investigators, who were conducting a routine security evaluation, were able to make their way into the critical area protected by a fence and armed guards, they did not reach the aircraft.

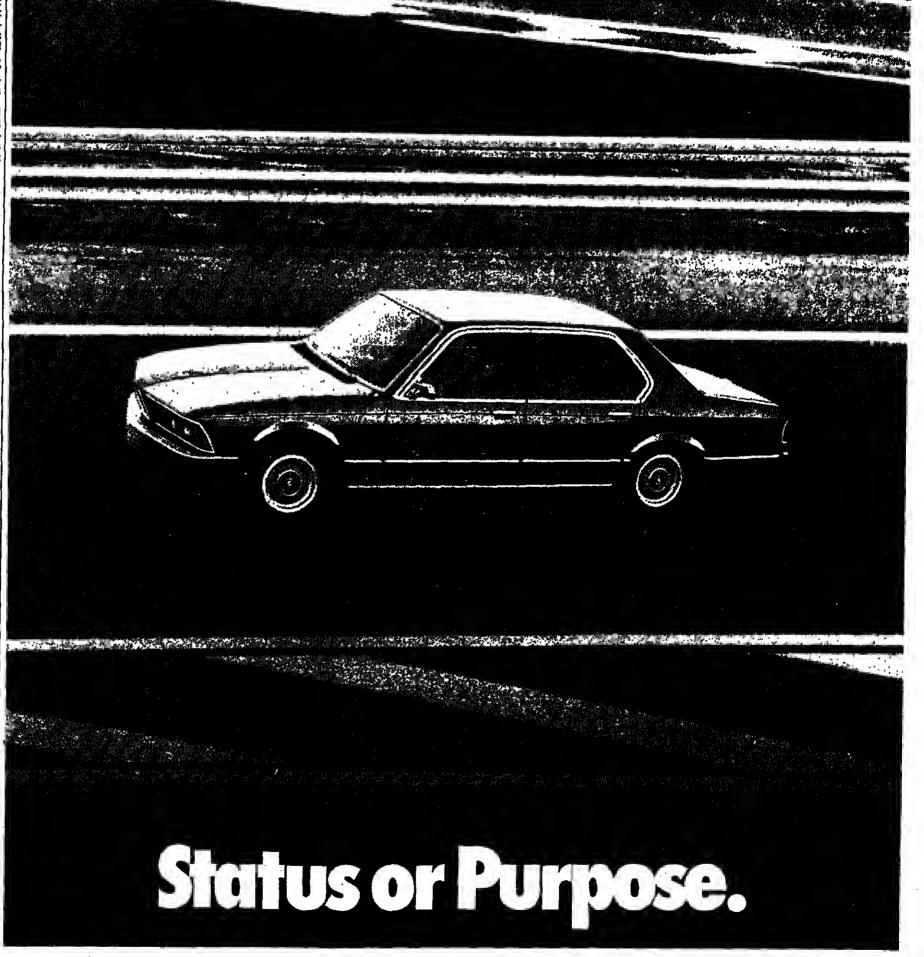

Col. Newton said that he relieved from duty a lieutenant colonel who served as commander of the base's security squadron and a major who was security operations officer. He said that a number of noncommissioned officers also were reassigned. All were relieved of their duties, the colonel said, because of a relations with the radical Libyan regime. They add that those who look only to the members of the Council of the Revolution for the nation's next president are conceivably being shortsighted.

in private, Algerians at the fringes of power say that those being mentioned as possible successors to Col. Boumedienne are not of his caliber and talk of the need for o collective leadership, at least for a time. But when President Nasser died in 1970, his self-effacing vice president, Mr. Sadat, seemingly content to remaio forever in the wings, was written off as a straw man who would be swept away by stronger, more intelligent soldiers. Instead, he bested his enemies and radically altered, even reversed, Egypt's position in the Middle East and the Arab world.

Algeria's socialist - or state capitalist — institutions are far more deeply rooted today than Egypt's were in 1970, but an economic system in itself does not dictate Alger-ia's options. They include Islamic militancy of the Libyan variety or a Sadat-like softening on economic and political issues, a ult to the Soviet Union or the West, a closing or opening of the spigot for the con-sumer goods craved by many Algerians, and ending or accentuating the bitter contest with Morocco over the Western Sahara.

Col. Boumedienne fixed a defioite stamp on Algeria and made Algeria a force in world affairs, but his nation is more varied than its official image. It has its underground, rightist Moslem brothers and Communist cells, its opportunists and idealists, and, of course, the military, the great arbiter. But there remains an unknown quantity, silent now for some time - the Algerian people,

Iran and Oil

A second wave of strikes in Iran raises once again that unpleasant question. What if the world has to get along with a suddenly di-minished supply of oil? The first strikes, a month ago, had hardly ended before the present round began. Iranian oil production is down to about half the normal volume and, apparently, sinking fast. Until recently, the world was pumping and burning a little over 60 million barrels of oil a day. Nearly one-tenth of it came from Iran's wells. While losing an amount of that magnitude might not be catastrophic, it would be decidedly uncomfortable. Worse, it would increase the instability of the world oil system by increasing the industrial countries' dependence on the other great exporter. Saudi Arabia - a dependence already dangerously great.

The United States does not import huge amounts of Iranian oil. Iran usually ranks fourth or fifth among this country's sources of crude oil, after Saudi Arabia, Nigeria and, depending on the shifting patterns of the trade, Libya, Algeria or Indonesia. But Iran is directly and indispensably important to Japan and Western Europe. If Iran's deliveries fall off, or continue to be irregular because of the country's internal chaos, the shortfall in supply will have to be shared among all buyers in both hemispheres.

During the first oil-field strikes last month, Saudi Arabia quietly raised its production to cover a large part of the drop in Iran. The Saudis are evidently prepared to prevent the disruptions in Iran from inflicting a severe shortage on the world, with all of its implications for jobs, economic growth and financial stability. But it is necessary to expect that supplies may be a little tighter this winter than the importing countries had expected. Earlier this year there was talk of a worldwide oil glut - meaning that the exporters had put a little more crude oil on the market than their customers immediately needed. But it was a very insubstantial and evanescent kind of a glut. It was always very small compared with the amount of oil that the world is using, and it always depended on a political decision by one government - Saudi Arabia's.

The Saudis are the only nation with both the physical capacity and the political latitude to raise or lower their production by significant volumes. That's why they now have more influence over oil prices than anyone else. OPEC, incidentally, is about to meet and raise the price again. The Iranian strikes are already beginning to push certain prices upward, and it will be difficult for OPEC to resist the temptation to exploit its opportunity.

Americans sometimes speculate, hopefully, that the market will shortly be awash in oil from those countries with large reserves but so far low production. Iraq and Mexico are the examples most frequently cited. It's a nice thought, but improbable. Those countries are now explicitly restricting their oil sales to the amounts they need to finance their own carefully measured development plans. Mexico, in particular, may well choose to sell more of its oil abroad in the years to come. But it is unlikely to move either fast enough or heavily enough to offset the effects of any prolonged interruption of the Iranian supply. Iran, after all, has become notorious as an example of spendthrift national policy. Oil-producing countries, and their citizens, have become increasingly sensitive to the issues of conservation and careful use of resources. They were an element in this week's election in Venezuela, for example, where the voters turned out the government on the charge, among others, that it had been wasting the country's oil revenues.

The declining flow of oil from Iran this week invites, inevitably, a glance backward to 1973 and the Arab oil embargo. Alone among the world's major industrial nations, the United States has allowed its oil imports to rise over the past five years; they are onethird higher now than then. But, as events are showing, wars and deliberate embargoes are not the only threatrs to a fragile and overburdened line of supply from the Persian Gulf.

On Crying Wolf

Who was it that kept crying wolf? or, to be precise, Katz? The Katz baby is dying of a disease, went the cry, that only America's glorious medicine can cure, but those awful Russians won't let Jessica and her parents, Boris and Natalya Katz, emigrate. Progressively exaggerated in parental pleas, protest meetings, newspaper commentary and the petitions of congressmen, Jessica's condition became an international cause even as the child improved. She arrived in the United States last week, with her parents and newborn sister, looking healthy and, it seems, * * *

As U.S. doctors suspected from afar, the ailment was correctly diagnosed by Soviet physicians last spring, when the baby was 6 months old, as a digestive disorder called malabsorption syndrome. It prevents an infant from drawing nourishment from milk and standard baby foods. Jessica's improvement began at about the time she started eating a special formula sent from the United States, but no one knows that it was necessary; she might have improved naturally, as so many other babies have.

The tale would end happily there if not for the awkward circumstance that many were led to believe that it offered a poignant example of Soviet callousness. Jessica, it was widely reported, might die not only because the Russians were reluctant to let Jews emigrate but also because they were paranoid about holding computer specialists like her parents and fearful that U.S. medicine might show up their own. We added our protest last May by wondering in these columns who it was that advised the Kremlin to pursue such "monstrous" policies.

Well, to the Russians, our apologies. They seem to have cared well for Jessica and cared enough about the worldwide hullabaloo that they swallowed their pride and let the Katz family go. No nation, of course, deserves congratulation for letting anyone emigrate. Perhaps the Soviet leaders will reflect on why so many people are always ready to believe the worst of them. If too many here cried wolf, it was because of the Soviet habit of passing off many a wolf as Little Red Riding

The Jewish organizations that seek to dramatize the plight of Soviet Jews need to think over the temptation of riding with a "good" but erroneous story. They also need to think again about their tactics in general. The restrictions on Soviet emigration are deplorable, but that does not make every potential refugee a victim of special persecution. Nor does it justify every form of counterattack, from misleading propaganda to trade restrictions.

And the U.S. press, we are sure, will reflect further on this affair. Jessica's improvement was in fact reported in dispatches to The Times and other papers, but we doubt that the news ever caught up with the initial cries of alarm or the protests of highly placed officials like Sen. Kennedy. Soviet dissenters and would-be emigres have become practiced propagandists for their cause; sympathy for it need not overwhelm the press's customary * * *

As Aesop counseled in the tale of the shepherd boy and the wolf, liars are not believed even when they tell the truth. That practical wisdom aside, there is so much misery in the world, surely humanitarians do not have to invent more of it.

Kenya's Secret

The pragmatic model adopted by Kenyatta for Kenya's development when the country achieved independence has survived for 15 years and proved a success. Though big disparities in living standards do persist, the ongoing improvement in economic couditions has brought significant material advantages to much of the population. The secret was the rejection of over-hasty Africanization on doctorinaire grounds coupled with the stable conditions and prosperity left behind by the colonial power. As a result, Kenya is one of the few African countries in which independence has not brought the indigenous population a reduced standard of

Pearl Harbor Plus 37 Years

By James Reston

W anniversaries have their military responsibility on their uses. They make us think about own A lot of people in Washington where we've been and where we're think it's high time, going. And on this 37th anniversary of Pearl Harbor and the entrance of the United States into World War II, this last month's headlines may remind us of the transformation and progress of the modern world.

The headlines are almost as large these days, and some of them are scary around the Gulf, but in the by talking about a little more free-perspective of history, they are dom for its people, who happen to quite different. They have to do with the clash of trade and ideas

Hard to Argue rather than the clash of armies; with Guyana and Namibia and the industrial world of the 1930s.

Instead of the enduring struggles between France and Germany, which led to two world wars and almost destroyed the civilization of the West, there now seems to be some anxiety that these two nations are getting almost too chummy, and as the Wall Street Journal reports, "are really more interested in forging a new [Franco-German] superpower that will be independent of American political and economic policy."

Friendship Treaty

Instead of the vicious propagan-da between Japan and China, which has gone on since the days of Teddy Roosevelt, a treaty of friendship and cooperation has been signed between these two countries.

Instead of preparing for one more war in the Middle East, Israel and Egypt are fussing over the de-tails of administrative home rule for the Arabs on the West Bank of the Jordan River and in the Gaza Strip. There are clearly critical problems to be resolved in all these things, but in comparative terms on the anniversary of Pearl Harbor, it is quite a switch.

Instead of a unified Communist instead of a unified Communist world trying to impose its ideological tyranny on the developing nations of Asia, Africa and Latin America, Moscow is obviously in trouble with China and the Communist parties of Western Europe, and is even looking — of course on its own terms — for a military company. its own terms — for a military arms agreement with the United States in order to improve the standard of living of its own people.

Nobody knows where all of this is going, but the trend is not too had. The major change since Pearl Harbor and the 1930s is that the industrial savians and particular. industrial nations, and particularly the nations with atomic weapons, have come to realize that they cannot achieve their political objectives by the risk of nuclear war.

Tragic Illusion

This was the tragic illusion of Ja-pan at Pearl Harbor and of the Germany of the kaiser and of Hil-ler, and even of the United States in Vietnam. But the nations are now competing with one another, even waging war with one another, by other means — by trade, money, and particularly the political control over the oil-producing areas of

In many ways the new conflicts are more confusing. The politics of the world are getting more mixed up, with more centers of power, more longings of modern technology, and at the same time, more philosophical and even theological protests against the materialism of the modern industrial states.

France and West Germany, or at least President Giscard d'Estaing and Chancellor Schmidt, are questioning the economic and even the military reliability of the United States, and are therefore thinking estate, and like any other business.

It is the Middle East, and for the moment Iran, that is troubling the major industrial nations — since 70 percent of their oil comes from the Gulf. But even this critical issue seems minor compared to the conflicts of the 1930s.

At least there is no immediate threat now of another Pearl Harbor. It will not be surprising if there are uprisings, rebellions, trib-al and even civil war in Africa for many years to come — after all, the United States had its own Civil War almost a century after its independence. But some lessons have been learned in the world since Pearl Harbor.

Despite all the present arguments over the next U.S. defense budget, the balance of military power is likely to be maintained in the world. That is the first lesson of Pearl Harbor. And the second is that, if nuclear war is too risky, the causes of war — poverty, trade, regional conflicts and population control — must be negotiated with concern not only for national interests but for the peace of the world.

Nobody here or elsewhere pre-tends that the complicated problems of today are easy or that they are clearly under the control of a new generation of hrilliant leaders, but 37 years after Pearl Harbor at least the world is not staggering or

Third World Is Gaining

By Jonathan Power

ONDON - On the face of it, L things don't look as bad as usual for the world's 2 billion poor. Good barvests, the terms of trade moving in their favor, reports that the population boom is at last responding to treatment, and a hefty jump in their manufactured exports suggest that the Cassandras may have got it wrong.

This is not just the lucky roll of the dice in a fluky year, it is for 50 percent of the Third World's population the tip of a rather solid achievement.

Despite all their problems, not least that at one time it looked as if their population growth would shoot off the graph paper, the de-veloping countries have handed in a time sheet that makes the now industrialized countries look a bit second-rate. Over the last 25 years they have increased their income per person by 3 percent a year. The Western nations in their first 100 years of industrial progress increased their income per head at only 2 percent a year.

The resilience inherent in the Third World's achievement became apparent when they were hit hy the two most savage events of postwar economic history — the food crisis of 1974 and the oil price rise of 1973. Their foreign exchange deficits became astronomical. But rather than cut back on growth they went out into the market place and borrowed heavily, mainly from Western commercial banks. The risk paid off. By maintaining growth they both outpaced the West and outgrew the size of the deficits. The deficits are now only as large, proportionate to their GNPs, as they were in the early and simplified, is true as far as it goes. It does leave out - and here's the rub - the other half of the story. There are still 28 developing countries containing 49 percent of the people of the southern hemisphere, who have little or no growth. And even for the success-ful, their economic growth has not been sufficiently broad based to make significant inroads on the condition of the really poor. Alto-gether, there are probably 800 mil-lion people living in absolute pov-

Most of these poor live in the rural areas, concentrated in South Asia, Indonesia, and hlack Africa. Agriculture has never been the Third World's forte and in many parts of the countryside the incomes of the peasantry have actualy been going down during the last 10 years of more.

Trek to Town

The trek to the town has become the desperate response. Surely here, the migrants reason, amid the office blocks, neon lights and traffic-choked highways, there is hope. But employment has not kept pace with industrialization, rapid as it is, The grimly concentrated shantytown and an escalating child mortalitiy rate is the ugly result. The Third World itself could do much to remedy this situation.

Rural development offers the only real long-run hope for abolishing poverty. In the short-term, however, it is important that the Third World keeps up its high growth rate, mainly industrial-based. Without this the problem of urban pov-erty will become unmanageable.

It is at this point we see how crucial is the role of the already industrialized countries. The Third World must export to the West to earn the foreign currency it needs for investment. Over the last 15 years their exports have grown at the healthy rate of 12 percent. The needs is an attempt by the West growth needs to be sustained, even

Sportswear Jogging Into Couture Scene

. . .'is alas not noticeable

Roger Larcheveque, editor of the sports magazine Loisirs Service, confirms the recent impact of active sportswear in French people;

life; its influence, he adds, "is alas not noticeable at Olympic level."

He says that in menswear, the sales of relaxed, weekend wear have shot up by 20 percent since 1970—at the expense of city clothes.

Clothing now represents half of the French sports market, be says, the other half being equipment. A 1977 survey showed that the money spent on sport-oriented goods by the French came to 23 billion frances.

Ginette Sainderichin, editor of Gap, a trade magazine mostly aimed at women, says, "I started talking about the influence of active sportswear a year ago. It is not just a question of shapes and styles. It is a complete shift, with people wearing active sports clothes, such as jogging suits and sneakers, in everyday life."

at Olympic level."

PARIS, Dec. 6 (IHT) Sweatshirts and sneakers for the office? Right. Odd as it may sound, active sportswear is one of the strongest directions in fashion

It is another case of leisure time making its mark, and every expert agrees the whole thing started in the United States with a combination of bealth faddism and the four-day working week. The French are catching up; jogging. once a laughing matter, is now part of the local countryside.

In a season slowed down by a balmy Indian summer, the only shops to have made money have been those devoted to skiing, ten-nis, jogging and such. One of the most striking successes has been Hemispheres, selling acrive sports outilis from all over but mostly from the United States. Opened of the sports-oriented Avenue de la Grande Armee only six months ago, it already has a monthly turn-over of 400,000 francs.

Former Reporter The shop is owned by Kim d'Estainville, a former Paris-Match

D'Estainville has retained his journalist's go-go attitude, his boundless enthusiasm and nose for spotting future winners. Recent theatrical producing ventures —
"Equus" and "Peines d'Amour

The same fashion wave has regisin French people's life

tered at Galeries Lafavette, where one of the fashion directors, Marie-Paule Gilis, says they now have a special jogging corner "where peo-ple buy the clothes not only for jogging but also for staying home."

Finally, the market is being invaded by discount stores. One of them, Go. . .Sport, has six outlets in and around Paris and six more scheduled to open before 1980.

EEC to Seek Japan Concessions

BRUSSELS. Dec. 6 (AP-DJ) — the European Economic Commu-city, which yesterday stressed the leed for the successful conclusion if the Multilateral Trade Negotiaions (MTN) within the General ignorment on Tariff and Trade GATT), said today it will seek fur-inger import concessions from Japan though the growth in Japan's hef-if surplus in the balance of EEC-apanese trade exchanges has aparently slowed.

Dollar Is Firm In Active Trade

LONDON, Dec. 6 (AP-DJ) — The dollar was little changed today against the main trading currencies in the wake of the decision on the European Monetary System.
The U.S. currency did come under some pressure in active trading for n time before central banks in Europe appeared to intervene, dealers said.

Against the Deutsche mark, the dollar finished at 1.9165 DM in London dealings compared with 1.9170 yesterday. It edged up 1.7083 Swiss francs from 1.7075 and eased to 4.3985 French francs from 4.4050. It was steady against the yen at 197.33 compared with 197.35 and gained on the guilder at 2.0773 compared with 2.0750. It slipped to 850.25 lire from 852.75. Sterling stood at $1.9514 against $1.9520 late yesterday and its effective rate was unchanged at 62.7 (end-1971 equals 100). The Canadian dollar was quoted at 85.26 U.S. cents versus 85.41.

Gold lost ground for the second straight day, fixed at $195.50 an ounce in the morning and $196.25 in the afternoon in London. It closed at $196.25, down from $197 late yesterday and $199.625 late Monday.

TOKYO, Dec. 6 (Reuters) -The United States has raised a new problem in the MTN talks hy pro-posing full liberalization of aircraft trade. Japanese government offi-cials said today. The officials at the Ministry for International Trade and Industry said the proposal, made at the talks in Geneva, called for making all aircraft imports duty-free in the areas of the United States, the EEC and Japan. Duties imposed in these areas range from 8 to 12 percent.

The U.S. proposal also called for removal of non-tariff barriers, in-cluding government subsidy systems for aircraft development, production and exports and govern-ment intervention in decisions by airlines on types of aircraft they

Kicking Protectionist Habits

By Hobart Rowen

WASHINGTON, Dec. 6 (WP) — Robert Strauss, having relinquished his anti-inflation duries to Alfred Kahn, is once again giving full time to international trade problems.

Mr. Strauss, who would be the last to claim that he was able to make a dent in inflation, would like to chalk up a real success before going back to the law business next year.

But the going is rough in the international arena, too. It is an open question of how much the current round of Multilateral Trade Negotiations (MTN) in Geneva is going to accomplish.

You may remember that President Carter and six other chiefs of state solemnly agreed at their summit meeting last July that the Geneva negotiations (confusingly called the Tokyo Round) would be concluded by Dec. 15 of this year.

Numerous Obstacles

There are all sorts of obstacles in the way, not the least of which is the expiration next January of a U.S. law which permits the government to waive countervailing duties, assessed to offset European subsidies on certain imports. The Europeans want assurance that this waiver will be extended.

But even if the countervailing duties issue is finessed, there is still a wide gulf between the United States and Enrope on the use of "selective safeguards," a nice euphemism for the Europeans' desire to shelter home markets from disruption, especially by develop-ing countries. The United States does not want any European na-tion to use this particular pro-

had a backlog of $575 million at the end of October deliverable over the seven-year period of 1979 to 1985. Textron said.

Textron said the stoppage does not affect Bell's other Iranian contract dealing primarily with the training of Iranian helicopter pilots and mechanics. That contract, which falls mainly under the U.S.

government's military-sales pro-gram, also involves the establishment of helicopter logistics systems and operational overhaul facilities.

unilaterally on the co-production contract. It also said Bell is "continuing to discuss the program with the government of Iran" and "is prepared to immediately resume the coproduction operations after receipt of clarification of the Iranian government's intentions with respect to the program funding."

The stoppage on the helicopter contract is part of a pattern of cutbacks and deferrals of overseas purchasing by the Shah of Iran.

The Shah already has told the United States that he is deferring previous plans to ask the United States to sell Iran several billion dollars of weapons in order to channel the money into social programs that would hlunt domestic criticism of his rule. Some U.S. officials think Iran ultimately may drop those purchase plans entirely.

Deferred are plans to buy 140
General Dynamics F-16 fighters and 70 Grumman Corp. F-14 fighters. Officials also say the Shah is likely to delay, or drop, plans to buy 31 McDonnell-Douglas F-4E fighter bombers to be armed with 1,000 Shrike air-to-surface missiles made by Texas Instruments, Irani-

The Tokyo Round is not like other trade negotiating cycles, such as the last one called the "Kennedy Round," which slashed tariff levels. This round does not deal so much with tar-iffs (which with some notable exceptions are now fairly low) as with the non-tariff barriers that protectionist-minded nations erect to impede disturbing levels of imports. These are more difficult to knock down

The Japanese are experts at this form of protection. So are the Europeans. And anyone who doubts that the United States does not know how to play the game is referred to the steel trigger-price system, the U.S. selling-price system for chemicals, and the "OMAs" — "orderly marketing quotas" — which place quota limits on TV sets, shoes and textiles.

There are all sorts of other non-tariff barriers, as well, such as subsidies and tax rebates for domestic producers. In essence, the rich nations involved at Geneva are engaged in an exercise in which they are trying to swear off such addictive habits designed to coddle their own

Downside Risk High

Perhaps the tip-off to what one ought to expect from the MTN is a note of caution from the normally effervescent Mr. Strauss. Just back from a swing around European capitals, the old Texas "pol" put it this way in an interview;

"I'm beginning to hear it said that the outcome of these efforts is going to have a dramatic impact on the economies of several efforts, the downside is going to What Mr. Strauss means is that Geneva should be considered a success if the agreement merely prevents the acceleration of protectionist trends. "When I grew up in Stam-ford, Texas," Mr. Strauss said, "the whole world seemed to depend on whether it rained or not five miles from the square. If it rained, we had prosperity, be-cause cotton grew. And if it didn't rain, we had depression, because we had no cotton. And no one paid any attention to what went on in London, or Paris, or Hong Kong."

That's a nice, homely illustration of the need, as Mr. Strauss sees it, for economie interdepen-dence instead of isolation. But it is tough to sell in practice to countries with high-cost and declining industries — such as steel, textiles, and shipbuilding -- unable to meet competition coming from the aggressive, up-and-coming developing nations. And similar special interest, protectionist groups working on the U.S. Congress, as Mr. Strauss recognizes, can undermine U.S. acceptance of a MTN accord. In a time of worldwide economie distress and high unem-ployment -- with relatively slow growth almost assured for the next several years — it is prov-ing difficult for the rich nations to kick the protectionist habit.

JORGE LUIS BORGES A Literary Biography

By Emir Rodrigue: Monegal. E. P. Dutton. 502 pp. $17.95. Reviewed by J. D. O'Hara

Argentine writing in Spanish and he is the author of essays, hrief poems, and ficciones, highly stylized short fictions. Of this Borges, parodied as Osberg in "Ada," Viadimir Nabokov once remarked: "At first Vera and I were delighted by reading him. We felt we were on a portico, but we have learned that there was no house."

But there is also the Borges described by Emir Rodriguez Monegal as "the first Latin American writer to influence Western culture." Perhaps even more than Samuel Beckett, with whom he samuel Beckett, with whom he shared the prestigious Formentor Prize in 1961, Borges has introduced contemporary readers to the painful joys of skepticism and philosophic inquiry; he has single-handedly raised the craft of metaphysical storytelling as practiced by Chesterton and H.G. Wells to the level of literature; and in a thorlevel of literature; and in a thoroughly idiosyncratic and subjective way he has argued for the values of impersonal, traditional, and objective tive art. He is also one of the finest, subtlest, and least appreciated of comedians, and a cultural influence not so much in the academy as in the streets. (Mick Jagger's best movie, "Performance," is explicitly indebted to both Euripides and

Chicken Inspector

He is a small, frail old man, now quite blind, who commands the veneration of the literate young, who is as much at home in Anglo-Saxon poetry and early Christian heresies as in the literature of a dozen languages, and wbom Juan Peron once appointed a chicken inspector.

Many critics and biographers have given us partial descriptions of Borges already, and Rodriguez Mooegal has profited by their work by Borges "Autobiographi-cal Essay" and many interviews, and hy a long friendship with his subject. But the present work is in no sense a mere scissors-and-paste

But the biography is not as com-plete a success as one would wish. Rodriguez Monegal unfortunately feels obliged to psychologize his subject dramatically. Since Borges' mother was strongly Argentine, his father Anglophile (Borges, a bilin-gual boy, first read "Don Quixote" in English) Rodriguez Monegal argues that the dual emotions of "desire and guilt" grew out of this split, leading to "a tragic conflict" in Borges' allegiances. "Only in Mother's discarded and despised code — in Spanish — will be later succeed in symbolizing all that archaic repressed material: the stuff bodies (and poetry) are made of."
Such psychologizing leads to the suggestion, among others, that Borges dislikes mirrors because they revealed to the child his separation from his mother and because he may have seen the manual services. he may have seen the primal scene in ooc. Later the author suggests that seeing this primal scene put Borges off sex. At another point he asserts that the coarse boys in school put him off it. Then a sexual experience in a Geneva brothel where Borges was taken hy his fa-ther is credited with having damp-

Describing the Turf

Rodriguez Monegal, a native of Uruguny gives us excellent descriptions of Borges' turf in Buenos Aires — Palermo, the Southside the National Library (which is housed in a building intended for the national lottery and decorated with "the symbols of chance") — and of Fray Bentos, Androgue, and other mysterious places that recur other mysterious places that recur throughout Borges' work. And the people, too (only Yeats has so thronged his writing with the living): his father and mother, his charming sister Norah, Evaristo Carriego, Macedonio Fernandez, Xul-Solar, Alfonso Reyes, Victoria
Ocampo, and Borges' alter ego
Adolfo Biov Casses autors mere Adolfo Bioy Casares, among many others. The Borges scholar Nesto; Ibarra is praised, as is Borges careful English translator Norman Thomas de Giovanni, who has rescued so many texts from the back-work of amateurs.

Despite the occasional psychological excesses, the discussions of some of Borges' central images the tigers, mirrors, mazes, masks and Minotaurs — are admirable. and Minotaurs — are admirable. The images appear early in Borger work, even in the stories of the child "Georgie": "A masked Persian prophet, the Iron Mask, the Minotaur: Georgie's heroes have two traits in common — montrosity and looeliness." Adding several anthors to the crowded pauthern of thors to the crowded pantheon of Borges' literary heroes which in cludes Nietzsche and Fritz Mauthner, Rodriguez Monegal also specifies Borges' relations with several dozen contemporary European and South American literary fig ures in whose circles he moved.

The Borges of the classroom a rather a mythical monster himself Rodriguez Monegal humanized him. We grow up with him in Bue nos Aires and Europe, return to Argentina, and become involved in i. the avant garde literary movements of the times — the little magazines the billboard street poetry, and more details about 1937, that true had been as a superior of the super cial year when Borges received a serious head wound and the year of his father's death. Even though Borges described the Christman Eve accident when he collided with a glass window as something mere brushing his scalp, the wound because of poor disinfection, be came inflamed, and Borges was dangerously ill. That year, which had begun with his father's death had begun with his father's death and with his being nursed by his mother. Rodriguez Monegal makes much of this, you may be sure. We also hear of many political involvements, especially the grotesqueries, of Peron, who "promoted him from a trivial post in a branch in the post of chicken inspect brary to the post of chicken inspector for Buenos Aires. We learn of Borges' wide service to Latin Amer ican readers and writers - his translations of foreign writers, his.:. essays oo them, his many editing. jobs: his generosity to the young and his bumor, energy, modesty, and playfulness, all presented will intelligence, judgment, and person.

Borges emerges as a much more: complex author than Nabokov ever suspected, and all his readers wil. profit from this study by Rodriguer Mooegal, a professor at Yale. whose own wi(ty and perceptive "Borges par lui-meme" (Edition du Scuil, 1970) has been supple. mented but not superseded by this valuable biography.

ment, which has been applauded repeatedly in this space. It offers a whole raft of advantages. Playing the larger share of the season in its own division, a team would save money on transportation and long-line charges for television. Best of all, neighborhood rival-ries would grow up to stimulate interest the way the old Brooklyn Dodgers-New York Giants clashes used to steam up the metropolitan clientele. You wouldn't need a pennant race to draw crowds when the Yankees and Mets tangled, or the Cubs and White Sox and Giants and A's.

Other Advantages

There would be interdivisional play and there is no reason why a number of interleague games couldn't be scheduled, too. However, the idea of interleague play in mid-summer (instead of that dreary charade called the All-Star Game) may strike the hierarchy as a little far out. It was never even proposed until Bill Veeck's father brought it up in 1922, and to adopt it for 1980 might be rashly impetuous.

One spring in St. Petersburg, Fla., the outline of three regional leagues with built-in rivalries was sketched for Gussie Busch, owner of the Cardinals. He listened attentively.

"You've got an idea there," he said, "but it'll be a long time before it could come about."

"It'll be a long time, because you guys think there would be something shameful about your joining the American League or vice-versa. So call 'em the Universal, Cosmic and Celestial Leagues, and everybody will move up.

"It'll be a long time," Gussie said.

The realignment plan will come up for discussion tomorrow in Orlando, Fla., where the baseball hierarchy is conducting its annual midwinter kaffee klatch.

Corner Bargaining

When they aren't dazzled by the wonders of Disneyworld, delegates to the convention will, according to custom, tiptoe off into corners to happle over trades. If the trend of recent years continues, a considerable number of players will be swapped like hogs.

It may be remembered that when Andy Messersmith and Dave McNally breached the reserve system three years ago, the entire baseball establishment from Bowie Kuhn to Charlie Finley cried havoc. The oracles saw hoards of free agents running loose across the land selling themselves to the richest clubs, upsetting "com-petitive balance," destroying "fan identification" with teams, plunging the weaker clubs into bankruptcy.

Each autumn since then, something like two dozen players have become free agents. In the last six years 322 players have changed teams involuntarily as pawns in trades. And in the decade of unrest since 1968, attendance in the big leagues has increased from 23,102,745 to 40,636,886 — with ticket prices rising.

"But we felt the only way to better our club was to continue along the path of getting young players and we got two who are vital to our future. We feel Griffin will be our starting shortstop next season."

Falcone Goes to Mets

The New York Mets obtained veteran left-hander Pete Falcone from the St. Louis Cardinals in ex-change for ontfielder Tour Grieve and Kip Seaman, a minor leaguer. Falcone, 25, was 2-7 in 19 games for the Cardinals last season.

Grieve, obtained in a four-team, 11-player trade completed at last

Fitzsimmons Pressures NBA Kings Into Winning

NEW YORK, Dec. 6 (NYT) - If pened since the franchise moved Cotton Fitzsimmons had not be-come a baskerball coach, he probably would have made a good preacher or salesman. Fitzsimmons has a way of making people listen when he discusses his coaching Defensively, he favors full-court pressure that disrupts an opponent's attack and forces turnovers. Offensively, he likes a quiek, aggressive go-to-the-basket game, with everybody involved.

In his fourth National Basketball Association coaching job since he left Kansas State University to become the coach of the 1970-71 Phoenix Suns, Fitzsimmons has the Kansas City Kings playing up to his beliefs. Together with the New Jersey Nets, the Kings are the league's early season surprises. Kansas City, the Midwest Division pacesetter and the fourth-best defensive team in the NBA, took a 13-8 won-lost record into last night's game against the Knieks at Madison Square Garden. The Kings, who had won nine of their last 12 games, were 19th in defense last season.

"It's been fun," said Fitzsim-mons, off to his best pro coaching start, "Kansas City has major sports franchises in baseball, fontball and basketball. The Royals have always been No. 1, the Chiefs No. 2, even though they have been losing since Hank Stram left. When the Kings did get a mention, the name was usually spelled wrong.

Now that we're winning, things are changing. We're starting to ex-cite the people. Our last three home crowds drew over 10,000 fans each. the first time that that has haplast season and finished tied for fifth place in the Midwest. When Fitzsimmons was asked the reasons for the turnaround, his answers came right out of the coaching manual — hustle, team play, balance and no individual stars and hungry players.

Ous Birdsong, Scott Wedman

and Sam Lacey are the more recognizable names on the Kings. The team also has three free agents who failed to make it the first time around — Marlon Redmond, Bob Nash and Billy McKinney.

The Kings give much of the cred-it for their fast start 10 Phil Ford, their top draft choice last June, Kansas City had the second pick in the draft and the Kings made no secret of their desire for a good playmaking guard to complement the sharp-shorting Birdsong.

"f remember, but that wasn't Watergate. Why should I have Nixon forgive me. after what he did in the White House?"

"Because that's the way it's always been with Nixon, No matter what he's ever done, we wind up asking him to forgive us, instead of the other way around. Frankly, I'd rather ask his forgiveness now than string out the agony over the next few years. I don't think I can stand watching him take the blame for all the mistakes he made while he was

"You can't ask his forgiveness," l told her angrily, "This is one time I don't see how he can get off the hook. He blew it, and if it hadn't been for Jerry Ford's pardon he'd he taking the Fifth Amendment right now. Instead, he's running around Europe telling everyone he's guilty, but he forgives the American people anyway.

"That's the most ridiculous thing I've ever heard. Nixon lied to us, he obstructed justice, he plotted to cover up all sorts of crimes, and he was responsible for dozens of people going to jail to protect him. And you say we're going to ask him to forgive us?"

"You got it. You thought he was going to sit it out in San Clemente looking out at the sea. I told you it would just be a matter of time hefore he'd be out in the streets having eggs thrown at him. I wouldn't be surprised if Nixon paid for the eggs out of his English royalues.

The Comeback

Alberta Hunter

By Leslie Bennetts

NEW YORK INYT) — By day she prowls the meat department at Macy's, inspecting veal chops and spareribs, lugging a shopping bag and shuffling along on feet that move as though they hurt. She likes to ride the city's huses, too: a tiny old lady with a woolen cap pulled down over her ears and a faraway look on her face. She might be humming a tune under her breath, though more likely she is singing only in her head.

But should you catch a stray wisp of melody, listen closely: The little old lady is the venerable jazz and blues great, Alberta Hunt-

After 20 years of obscurity, the $3-year-old singer is once again in the limelight — last Sunday she wowed 'em at the White House — and, says she, "I'm the happiest woman in this world."

By day she is drab anonymity itself, but at night Miss Hunter does two shows (three on weekends) at The Cookery, where she delivers the sexiest renditions in town of such numbers as "I Want a Two-Fisted, Double-Jointed, Rough-and-Ready Man" slapping her thigh. clapping her hands with their blood-red talons. flashing a wicked wink and sending her audiences into paroxysms of applause and whistles.

Academy Award Speculation

Meanwhile, there is speculation that she might receive an Acadenty Award nomination for the score of her first movie, Robert Altman's "Remember My Name," She composed and performed all the songs for it, despite the fact that she can neither read nor write music. When the film opened in Memphis a few weeks ago, Gov. Ray Blanton of Tennessee declared a statewide Alberta Hunter Day and gave her the keys to her native city. "I don't have the words to tell you; you'll never know how I felt." says Miss Hunter softly, shaking her head.

The daughter of a maid in a Memphis whorehouse, she ran away from home at 11 because she'd heard that singers in Chicago were making $10 a week. Her youth and diminutive size notwithstanding, Miss Hunter (at the time still known as "Pig," her childhood nickname) managed to land a job at a place called Dago Frank's, whose habitues consisted mainly of pickpockets. small-time gangsters and ladies of the evening.

But it seems that these unlikely substitute parents were as solicitous as maiden aunts, admonishing little Alberta never to take gifts from gentlemen and to live a clean life — and to this day, she vows, she has never smoked nor drunk alcohol ("I hate the smell

Dago Frank's, of course, was only the beginning. There followed appearances at Chicago's Dreamland (where Al Jolson came to hear her sing "St. Louis Blues" and Sophie Tucker to listen to "A Good Man Is Hard to Find"), recordings with Eubie Blake, Louis Armstrong and Fats Waller, and, in 1923, a move to New York

'Downhearted Blues'

Within four days she had replaced Bessie Smith on Broadway in "How Come." Miss Smith also helped launch the newcomer as a songwriter when she chose Miss Huoter's "Downhearted Blues" for her first Columbia recording. It sold a million copies within months. "And I'm still collecting the royalties." Miss Hunter says with a cackle. "I'm too slick to let 'em cheat me outta that!"

Then it was on to London, where she starred in "Showboat" with Paul Roheson, and drew the Prince of Wales and Noel Coward to hear her night after night at the Dorchester; to Paris, where she replaced Josephine Baker at the Folies Bergere; and throughout Europe and Asia on tour after tour.

Miss Hunter was married ("Once is plenty") to a Chicago waiter who later became a labor union official, but she left him after two weeks for a booking in Monte Carlo and never came back. She has no children, but was very close to her own mother, and when her mother died in 1954 the loss precipitated a sudden and total change in Miss Hunter's life.

Today she merely smiles and shrugs when asked why she did what she did, but three days after her mother's funeral Miss Hunter enrolled in school, hecame a practical nurse and gave up singing - forever. she thought.

For more than 23 years she worked happily as a scruh nurse at Goldwater Memorial Hospital here, where no one had any idea of her exouc past. Nor did they have much idea of her age; when they finally insisted she retire last year, the hospital administra-tors believed Miss Hunter had reached the mandatory retirement age of 70. "I was 82." Miss Hunter announces smugly.

'Bored to Tears'

She was also "bored to tears" hy ber enforced idleness, and when she ran into some old musical cronies at a party for Mabel Mercer (a friend of 50 years), one of them passed the word to 76year-old jazz impresario Barney Josephson, who had known Miss Hunter decades ago. He called her the next morning and asked her to come and sing at The Cookery.

Despite her protests ("I didn't even hum in the bathtub for 20 years!"), Miss Hunter opened there in October of 1977, and except for a couple of brief vacations she's been there ever since. A European tour for next spring is now being discussed: "She's wanted all over the world — Copenhagen, Leningrad, Berlin, Tokyo, everywhere!" says Josephson (who then goes off to answer a telephone call from Ray Charles' manager; Charles, it seems, is interested in recording a new Hunter tune she had sung on the "Today" show a few days earlier).

PEOPLE: U.S.-Soviet Marriage Makes It on 4th Try

25-year-old U.S. nurse who made three earlier trips to the Soviet Union to marry a Russian citizen finally broke through the red tape and married 29-year-old Yuri Balovlenkov in Moscow. Elena Kuzmenko, who said she was six weeks pregnant with Balovlenkov's child, now faces a bureaucratic batthat, how faces a buteaucrate batthe to get her busband out of the country. The couple went directly from the Wedding Palace to the U.S. Embassy to begin filing the papers to get Balovienkov an exit visa. Mrs. Balovienkov's visa expires this weekend and she must return to Belsinger on Monday. turn to Baltimore on Monday -with or without husband. The bride met Balovienkov, a computer spe-cialist, in 1977. They courted hy long-distance telephone that sum-mer and fell in love. She came to the Soviet Union intending to marry him — twice last year and again in September — but kept running into delays because of the Soviet requirement that prospective married couples must wait 30 days before the wedding. She first received permission to marry Nov. 29, 1977, hut her visa expired during the waiting period. She ran into a simi-lar problem on her next trip, and again returned home unmarried a month ago. She immediately applied for a new visa and planned the return trip. This time, success.

Violinist Joe Vennti became the 45th musician to be elected to Downbeat magazine's Hall of Fame, joining such jazz greats as Louis Armstrong, Benny Goodman and Duke Ellington. Venuti. who died earlier this year at the age of 82, was the first violinist to be so honored.

When Alvin Ailey and his American Dance Theater performed at the White House Nov. 12, the most attentive and apparently most im-pressed member of the audience was King Hassan II of Morocco. As a result. Ailey says, the king has invited him to bring his company of 25 dancers to Rabat to entertain the monarch and a small group of friends New Year's Eve. After giving an outdoor performance New Year's Day as a gift from the monarch to his people, the Ailey company, which is being flown to Rahat at the king's expense, will be his guests for a week's vacation in Morocco.

The Daily Princetonian was The Daily Princetonian was founded 102 years ago as "a medium for a bold, frank, and manly expression of college opinion"—in the words of Woodrow Wilson, one of its early editors. Well, forget about that "manly" stuff: Anne Mackay-Smith, a 21-year-old from forwish Mass, has been elected Ipswich, Mass., has been elected the paper's first chairwoman, and will also serve as its publisher.

Some of the luminaries of the auto-racing world showed up at a Munich discotheque and joined the cast. Niki Lauda led one of the showgirls to the dance floor for a couple of laps while a Tshirted James Hunt teamed up with a male singer for a duet.
